[Module 1]

Sub-theme: Global Governance of Environmental Issues

Lectured by: Cheng Fang-Ting, Ph.D. (University of Tokyo)
Researcher, Law and Institution Studies Group, Inter-disciplinary Studies Center,
Institute of Developing Economies, Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO)

Abstract: Environmental issues have already become one of the most crucial international affairs since the end of the Cold War. It is not only because of the structural change in international relations, but also because of complicated nature of environmental issues which can be attributable to deepening globalization. Take efforts to alleviate climate change for example, international society has been sitting on the table of wrangling negotiations in order to reduce greenhouse gas emissions while securing economic development. The goal of this lecture is to overview global environmental governance, especially on the UN-led climate change negotiation, its background and outcomes by connecting different issue-areas together such as role of knowledge communities, occurrence of disasters, outbreak of conflicts, industrial policies and business initiatives, etc.

[Module 2]

Sub-theme: Introduction to Contemporary International Law

Lectured by: Masaharu Yanagihara, LL.D. (University of Tokyo)
Professor, Open University of Japan
Professor Emeritus, Kyushu University

Abstract: It was a common view in the 19th century that international law is a concept developed only in Europe. This view was severely criticized and now the opinion is commonly supported that there are various types of "international law" in various periods and in various regions and that the current international law is just one type of "international law". This historical background is critical to understanding the contemporary perspectives of international law in today's multicultural society. The lecture focuses on the relevance of this history to contemporary understanding of international law and international legal issues.

[Module 3]

Sub-theme: Contemporary Issues in Regional Integration

Lectured by: Mark Fenwick, Ph.D. (University of Cambridge)
Associate Professor, Faculty of Law, Kyushu University

Abstract: Post-1945, there has been a global trend towards regional integration, of which the EU and ASEAN are two prominent examples. The purpose of these classes will be to examine various topical and contemporary legal issues that have arisen in the context of regional integration.

Topics to be discussed will be:

- Various legal issues related to the creation of a "single market" in the context of a regional organization.
- Concepts of human rights and debates on human rights and Asian values, in the context of preventing terrorism.
